SPRINGS

Selected by State Pharmaceutical Association as Place for Meeting in July.

Webster Springs has been selected by the State Pharmaceutical Association as the place at which the annual meeting of that organization will be held July 18, 19 and 20, and a big delegation of local members will undoubtedly attend.

A committee, including President W. S. Vinson, of Huntington; Secretary G. O. Young, of Buckhannon; Fred Allen and E. W. Harrison, of the Traveling Men's Auxiliary, and Alfred Walker, president of the State Board of Pharmacy, have been at Webster Springs looking over the ground, and all are enthusiastic over the location selected.

The place is an ideal one they declare. It has been reported that the magnificent scenery, while the resort the committee found incorrect. It is situated in a section noted for its magnificent scenery, while the resort itself offers every inducement for the comfort and pleasure of the druggists who will attend.

GOLDSBORO

HEARD FROM

A Lady Who Lives in Goldsboro Joins in the Chorus of Praise for Cardui, The Woman's Tonic.

Goldsboro, N. C.—“A physician treated me for many distressing symptoms,” writes Mrs. Etta A. Smith, “but gave me no relief.”

“I suffered with neuralgia around the heart and was troubled at times with my head. I had pain in my left side, bowels, left thigh, shoulders and arms.”

“After taking Cardui, I am now well and can recommend it to other suffering women.”

Just such doubtful symptoms, as those from which Mrs. Smith suffered, are the ones for which it will pay you to take Cardui, the woman's tonic.

It is at such times, when there is nothing to show, for certain, the real cause of the trouble, that you need a tonic, to give the body strength to throw off the illness that evidently threatens.

Take Cardui, when you are ill, with the ailments of your sex. Take Cardui as a tonic, to prevent illness, when you feel it coming.

Your druggist keeps it.

N. B.—Write to: Ladies' Advisory Dept., Chas. N. Medicine Co., Clarksburg, Tenn., for Special Treatments, and for a free “Woman's Tonic” sent in plain wrapper on request.

MERCHANDISE OF INTEGRITY

The Knight of the Silver Star

A Romance of Drussenland

By PERCY BREMER

Copyright, 1907, by R. F. Fenno & Co.

I found the ring, and to it I tied the rope. I tested the security of the knots at least half a dozen times before I let the rope go. It swung out to its length with a jerk. I fastened the sword tightly round me, and then I stood for a moment. It was a short prayer I muttered—too short, perhaps, for the great matter I was entering upon, but it was an earnest one. Then I sat upon the edge of the sill and, grasping the rope with both hands, let myself go, dropping to my full length. It was the way that only dead men took, yet I, a living one, was about to take it.

It had seemed pitch dark in the dungeon, yet I hung in a greater blackness and could discern the opening above my head. I wasted no time now. I had begun my journey. It was simply a matter of sliding down the sill and standing myself by the rope. This was easy enough.

I must have traversed nearly the fifty feet of rope, yet my feet had always met the wall. I had come to no other hole, no other slip joining the main shaft. Hand over hand I went down, first feeling the rope with my feet to make certain that I was not at the end of it, then feeling the wall, not to miss the opening I sought for. Hand over hand, then my feet dangling below me—there was no more rope. For an instant I felt inclined to let go and fall to death, so ending my troubles. Then I went up hand over hand in desperate haste, and, having got the rope between my knees again, I hung, swinging, and steadied myself to think. Either I had missed the hole or O'Ryan was mistaken: the rope was not long enough. Perhaps it was because the first solution was the most acceptable that I believed it to be the correct one. I took courage and climbed upward, stretching my legs to right and left searching for the hole. I might have missed it even then had I not heard a sound that made me listen intently. Yes; it was distinct from the hissing of the water below me, the murmur of a man's voice. Was it above me in the dungeon I had escaped from? If so, I had only to wait a few moments. I should feel the rope jerked, or else it would be cut, and so an end to me. I hung, waiting, and still in a dull monotone the voice went on. Suddenly a little below me and to my left the rocky wall seemed to grow luminous, a flickering light that shone for a moment, then died, then shone again.

“Is that a good way out of life?” The voice sounded low, yet the words were distinct. The light flickered and then slowly went out. I lowered myself to the level where it had been and then, holding the rope with one hand, worked my way along the face of the wall with the other. I made slow progress, but presently I grasped the side of the sill. Cautiously I felt for the door of it with my foot. After some minutes I succeeded in finding it, but it was, if anything, at a sharper angle than the sill from my dungeon. How to get a footing upon it was a matter for consideration. As it was, I had to hold on to the side of the sill to prevent the rope swinging back with me, for instead of being directly under my dungeon, as O'Ryan had led me to suppose, this opening was a good ten feet to one side of it. Fortunately the walls of it were rough hewn, and, clinging to the rope with my knees and feet, I managed to drag myself inward with my hands, my arms and fingers suffering in the operation. By letting the rope slide between my knees gradually as I advanced I brought myself to the floor some feet from the edge of the sill. I chose the spot and then dropped forward on my hands and knees. The released rope swung back and was gone. There was no return now. I had dropped very cautiously, and all my energy had been centered on what I was doing. Now I was aware that above me, at the top of the steep ascent, there was a light. O'Ryan had not deceived me. The trap in the dungeon was open.

There was a pillar in the middle of the dungeon, supporting the low vaulted roof, and in a ring in the pillar a torch was fixed. A breeze from the open trap caught the flame, making it flicker wildly and cast strange shadows. On a couch at the foot of the pillar sat Daria, her hands clasped to her lap. She hardly seemed to listen to Vascen, who was standing close to her, talking rapidly.

“I have been ambitious. I have deceived you. I crave your pardon. I have not done it for myself alone. I have done it for you. My love has spurred me on. They would make me king. It has been my ambition to reign in Yadasara. Now your ambition close to her, talking rapidly.

“You are not a king.” “Tonight, no, tomorrow.” He broke off excitedly. “Say that you will be queen of Yadasara, my queen, and now, this instant, this dungeon door is open to you. In a few hours you shall have the nation at your feet craving your favors. Your word shall bring death or grant life. Your will shall be law in Drussenland and he who speaks the humblest yet the happiest of your slaves.”

“A pleasing prospect most easily spoken of.” “It is true. Tomorrow at this time I shall be king. The last obstacle is overthrown.”
